ABSTRACT

The present invention relates to a method for identifying protein-protein interactions. The interacting proteins are isolated by affinity chromatography and identified by mass spectrometry. The affinity chromatography method allows for the purification of unknown

5   interacting proteins which are identified using mass spectrometric techniques. The invention provides a method for the high throughput analysis of protein-protein interactions that lends itself to automation.

10